CHAPTER I.—The future of the still youthful and comely "Widder" Marcia Howe, rerently released by seath from her idling, seithen husband, is a conversational tit-bit among the housewives of the little hamiet of Wilton. Eligible bachelors

CHAPTER II ... Marcia, despite har unfortunate matrimonial experience. Inde pleasure in her dally life, but is lonely at limes, and has invited her late husbands nieca, Sylvia liayden, whom she has never sten, to visit her. The siri arrives and Marcia takes to her at once, while sylvia, expecting to see a somewhat elderly aunt, finds Marcia more like a sister.

CIFAPTER III ... Into the uneventful, happy lives of the two women comes "Advanture." A stranger, on the varge of exhaustion, finds his way to Marcia's home. Cared for, he explains that his power-bost ran aground in the fog. His wrist is injured. Becretly, he sake Marcia to hide a package containing iswelry, the does so. The doctor comes, with Elisha Winslow, town sheriff, bringing the news of a jewel robbery on a neighboring long laiked estate.
The stranger, hospitably put to bed gives his came as Hanley Heath.

CHAPTER IV

"A ND yet you told me, Marcia, this was a quiet, adrentureless place!" burst out Srivia, the instant the door had closed.

"It doesn't seem so to me. When ablpwrecked mariners fall into your arms collecty without warning, I call it thrilling. Who do you suppose he la?"

"He told us his name." "Of tourse - Heath. Stanley Heath. It's quite a romantic name too. But I didn't mean that. I

"I really couldn't say." "Well, apparently he aln't one that bonsts of his possessions, an' that's to his credit," interposed Jared Stetson good-humoredly. Elisha's interest in the stranger was not, however, to be so easily diverted.

"Seen the boat?" he inquired. "No."

"Oh, you ain't! I forgot to ask Heath the name of her. I'm sort of a crank on the names of boats. It always riles me to have a foolish name given a boat. No matter how small she is, her plankin' is all that divides her owner from fathoms of water, an' in view of the fact he'd oughter regard her soberly an' give her a decent name."

"Well, I hope the name of Mr. Heath's boat will meet with your approval," ventured Sylvia archly. "I hope 'twill," was the glum retort, as the sheriff followed Doctor Stetson through the doorway.

The moment the door banged be hind them, Sylvin turned toward Marcia.

"Forgive my butting in, dear," apologized she. "But I was so surprised. You did say you didn't know Mr. Heath, didn't you?" "Yes."

"Hutasbutas"

"Sometimes it's just as well not to tell all you know-especially in a place like this," was the evasive response

Was the reply a rebuke or more ly a caution? Sylvia did not know.

And what was the meaning of the rose color that dooded the elder woman's cheek?

Had Marcia really meant to give the impression that she knew Stanley Heath? And if so, why? Sgivia wracked her brain for an

She would go up the beach and watch the men while they worked. The house was close. She longed for air and the bix reaches of the out-of-doors.

A jingle of glass and sliver! It was Sylvia returning with the tray. Her eyes were shining.

"He ate every bit!" she cried. It would have done your heart good. The poor lamb was almost starved. He asked for you the first thing. I don't think he altogether liked your not carrying up the tray, although of course, he was too polite to say "You explained I was busy?"

Anyway, the thing that really mattered was Mr. Heath's Interest in her-Sylvia; in her trip east and her description of Alton City, the little midwestern town which was her home. How he had laughed at her rebellion at being a school teacher, and how insidiously he had hinted she might not always be

Apparently he had been almost everywhere-except to Alton City. Odd he should never have been there when he had visited just about every other corner, both of America and Europe. Not that he had deliberately said so. He was far too modest for that. It was while trying to find out where his home was that she had stumbled upon the information. And come to think of it, she did not know now where he lived, she suddenly remembered. She actually did not know whether he had a father or a mother; a brother or a sister. So occupied was she with her thoughts she had not thought once of Prince Hal. In fact she had supposed that he had gone up the beach with Marcia. Now she suddenly became aware that he stood solfling about the bearth, scratching at its surface as If he scented something beneath. "Whn. Is it, Prince? What's the matter?" whispered she. Delighted to have gained her at tention, the dog barked.

"Oh, you mustn't bark, darling," she cautioned, muzzling his nose with her hand. "You'll wake Mr. Heath. Tell Missy what the trouble is. Do you smell a mousie under

"I don't believe it." Sylvia demurred, "You're only bluming, Well. to convince you, I'll take up the brick." Fetching from the pantry a steel fork, she inserted the prongs in the crack and pried the offending brick out of Its hole. Instantly the dog snatched from the space beneath a handkerchief containing a small, hard object. Sylvia chased after him. "Bring it here, Hal. That's a good

Budget-Balancer No.1 -The Housewife

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman Sentinels of the Republic If our political spendiliritis really want to learn how to balance their budgets let them turn to the average American housesile. She's Budget-Balancer No. 1. She has to be Unite the newer economists in public office she can-not spend too dollars for every dollar she takes in, and blandly load the difference on the public. She has to cut her expenditures to fit whatever income a pay envelope

That's why these "indirect" taxes which boost the family food bill, the family rent bill, the family bills for clothing and for everything else she burs, mean so much to her. No matter on whom the tax-creators and tax-raters attempt to load the cost, the bill is finally paid out of her thin purse.

How deeply do the billions squandered by office-holders during rehousewife's operating funda?

Well, research workers have estimated that the majority of taxes collected by government are passed on to the public in the form of increased prices — and that, so discreased prices — and that, so discreased prices guised, they consume one dollar out of every five which finds its way into the family pocketbook.

Actually, then, the average housewife faces a dual responsibility-first, to conserve the contents of the family purce, and, second, to dethat politicians cease the reckless squandrring and piling on of taxes which rob her of the benefits of her sarrifices and economics.

In the overwhelming majority of American families she has succeeded in balancing her own budget. Now ahe is ineisting that the politicians cooperate by learning to balance theirs.
